JURY FAILS TO

the first-9 for acquittal and 2 for con

At 10 oclock Wednesday night the case was given to them with the reading of the judge's charge and they retired to deliberate. One ballot taken and it stood 9 to 2 and when they returned to the courtroom this morning the vote stood the same.

A Hopeless Tie-Up. Thursday, the jury could not agree, knew they could not agree but the nine were against the three and the three were against the nine and a fight was on. Finally the debate was declared off; it was to be a mistrial.

Then the sextette, the men who had amused their fellows with song and story during the week, were given the stand and again performed for their fellows. There was dancing, there was singing, there was story telling and even a few boyish pranks were indulged in to relieve the monotony. Then the jurors argued again, the younger men proposed a game of lesp frog. They adjourned to the upper balcony east of the jury room far shove the crowds in the street and Moore for the prosecution, who talked played the game of their school days five hours and five minutes. for nearly an hour.

Then they went back to argue and at 5:30 one of the three had been won over; it was 10 to 2. This is as near to victory as the defence ever got for the man again changed his mind and went back with the two who had stuck even when they saw one of their number waver.

They went to supper, came back and went to bed and they stood nine-to breakfasted but did not ballot. Then they were called to the courtroom and discharged. They had done their as they saw it and stood nine to three, "That is the greatest service a man can do his country," said W. W.
